Docket: 29725

To the Honorable Chief Judge Karen B. Owens:

Thank you for taking the time to consider my claim. While I agree the ticker quantity associated with 4 of the NFTs is incorrect, the amount sought in the claim is valid.

The settlement claim template did not provide an opportunity to associate dollar amounts with the NFTs. The settlement claim template only gave the opportunity to assign a quantity, rather than a dollar figure. Each NFT was assigned a value of 1.0000. As a result, the only way to reflect a valid claim amount was to include the dollar amount in the ticker quantity.

For example, I agree I did not have a total of 1,500.0000 NFTs entitled, "1 On 1." Rather; I had one NFT entitled, "1 On 1," valued at $1,500.00. I also agree I did not have 2,080,000.0000 NFTs entitled, "Action Jacksons' (Alternate)." Rather; I had one NFT entitled, "Action

Jacksons' (Alternate), "valued at $2,080,000.00. The same scenario applied to the NFTs entitled, "Bryce Harper," and "Instant Replay." I did not own 1,300,000 NFTs entitled, "Bryce Harper." Rather, I had one NFT entitled "Bryce Harper," valued at $1,300,000.00. Lastly, I agree I did not have 750,000 NFTs entitled, "Instant Replay." Rather, I had one NFT, entitled "Instant Replay," valued at $750,000.00.

Based on the supporting documentation I have included with this letter, there is absolute certainty this claim is prima facie valid. Furthermore, there are notable public figures who have legitimized and monetized NFTs.

For closure; I kindly ask that my claim get validated based on the evidence I have presented, as well as the reputation of FTX.

Thank you,

Coleman E. Jackson

Could your old baseball cards make a you millionaire?

It is a familiar story for Coleman Jackson, owner of Action Jackson's Sports Cards, an online baseball card store based in Clayton.

A client stops him at a memorabilia show and asks him to evaluate a sports card collection. The client is dreaming of using it to pay for a kid's college tuition or buy a Corvette.

Jackson has to deliver bad news. The client won't be walking away with a pile of cash.

"There is a large discrepancy between what our clients feel their collection is worth than what it is ultimately worth," Jackson said.

But a select, lucky few can turn their childhood dreams into riches.

A Colorado man last week found a trove of sports cards in his aunt's attic that are expected to fetch nearly $1 million at auction. The collection includes unopened boxes of 1948 Bowman baseball cards, 1961 Topps football cards, 1961 Nu-Card baseball cards and 1961-62 Fleer basketball cards.

Each set contained several unopened packs in their original box, a find virtually unheard of in the sports card industry. In fact, the 1948 Bowman cards include the original gum.

"Unopened cards in the original box is pretty damn rare," said Thomas Johnson, owner of Bethany Sports Cards & Collectibles in Bethany Beach. "That's the first I've ever heard of it and I've been in this business for 25 years."

So how can Delawareans know if their collection is a home run or strikeout?

Most dealers operate with one simple rule: The older the better.

Cards from the game's early days through the 1970s are the most valuable cards because there were fewer card companies and those companies produced a smaller number of cards for each player.

In the 1980s, a wave of nostalgia swept over baby boomers and they began to scoop up cards of that era's stars. The demand drove up prices and card companies responded by expanding their print runs for each set. At the same time, a bunch of new card companies such as Upper Deck, Donruss and Pacific entered the scene. The result was a flooded market and dropping card values. Card prices from that era have never recovered from the saturated market.

In 2016, Topps produced more than 10 different sets specific to that season's players.

"Rookie cards used to be valuable, but Ken Griffey, Jr. has an Upper Deck rookie card, a Fleer rookie card, a Donruss rookie card and a Topps rookie card," Jackson said naming some of the popular card manufacturers.

The market still has not rebounded largely because it is still flooded with too many cards and manufacturers. That leaves nearly 40 years of cards that are practically worthless.

For example, Mickey Mantle's 1952 Topps rookie card is selling on Ebay at prices ranging from $39,000 to $125,000 depending on its condition. A Mantle card in pristine condition was auctioned off for $525,800 in 2015.

In contrast, the rookie card for Greg Maddux, one of the game's greatest pitchers, is topping out on Ebay for $12. A first-ballot Hall of Famer, Maddux won four Cy Young Awards and has the eighth most wins in baseball history.

"Anything from the '70s, '80s and '90s has no value," said Scott Polsen, owner of AB Sports at the Concord Mall. "The overproduction has killed the value."

The Internet also has impacted card values. Before Ebay, card dealers and shows were collectors' only source for rare cards. This gave dealers a monopoly and they could dictate prices. However, the average collector can now get cards from Ebay or Beckett.com, a website that operates as a sports card mall, and shop for the best price.

"Older dealers tell me stories of how great things were as recently as 10 or 20 years ago, before the Internet," said Jackson, who at 38, says he is one of the youngest collectors in the industry. "Back then a dealer could get the full value for a card, but now those cards are no longer rare and dealers are bidding against each other by offering the lowest competitive price."

However, nearly all cards from the 1960s or earlier have kept their value, including "commons," industry slang for cards of players who were not Hall of Famers or all-stars. Besides having a fewer number of cards in existence, earlier generations did not take care of their cards with the enthusiasm of today's collectors. As a result, very few copies of those cards exist in good condition.

"Even commons from the 1960s can be rare," Polsen said. "In the 1960s Topps did something called high numbers where last the few cards would have short print runs. Those cards can go for a good amount of money, about $10-to-$15 each."

Cards from earlier eras still generate a tremendous interest among investors. Most cards from the early 1900s fetch several thousand dollars at auction, especially if the card features a Hall of Famer or other great player. A 1915 Cracker Jack "Shoeless" Joe Jackson card was auctioned for $101,555 in 2014 -- more than double the previous auction record for that card.

Docket

It can be difficult to price items from baseball cards' earliest days. Jackson recommends sellers look around and see what prices similar cards are commanding before attempting to get rid of a collection. He said comparing prices on Ebay or looking at an online price guide will help collectors determine which cards have value.

"The best advice I can give is use the information age to your advantage," Jackson said. "You may not be able to find the value you want, but you will get a good idea of the market."

Unfortunately, some collections have little value.

"There is nothing you can do," Polsen said. "There just is no market."

Jackson suggests donating the cards to a children's charity. He collected a bunch of old cards and donated them to the Ronald McDonald House, a nonprofit that supports children and their families.

Topps' website includes a list of organizations that accept card donations.

Chances are a Delawarean doesn't have $1 million dollars in cards sitting in their attic or basement. However, Johnson said that shouldn't stop anyone from looking. A friend of his found a rare baseball autographed by early 20th-century pitching legend Walter Johnson. An autographed Johnson baseball ranges between $3,000 and $20,000 based on condition.

"There are all kinds of finds out there," he said.
